E-Administration

What is e-Administration?

It is a set of online tools that enables citizens to interact with public administration by electronic means. Thus, users are able to obtain information, ask questions, present allegations or applications, manifest consent or intention, make payments or transactions and contest administrative resolutions and actions.

E-Administration allows administrative procedures to be carried out, guaranteeing the user's identity without having to be present in person at the offices in charge of the corresponding processes. It also ensures the integrity of the documents presented.

What is a digital signature?

It is currently a very commonly-used form of identification. Also known as e-signature, it has the same validity as the written signature.

What advantages does it have over a written signature?

A hand-written signature can be falsified; a digital signature cannot.

What are the characteristics of an e-signature?

Authentication of the message's origin:

This security aspect protects whoever is receiving the document, guaranteeing that said message has been generated by the party identified in the document as the issuer. Thus, an equivalence is established with the hand-written signature, both being equally valid.

Signature verification tool

You need only type in the numerical code that appears in the document. The system will let you know the signatory's identity.

Integrity of the information:

This refers to the security system that proves that the data transmitted between users has not been modified during the sending process. The information sent is what finally reaches the receiver.

Non-denial of origin:

The person who sent the message cannot, later, deny that it was sent by him/her.

//Identity theft is impossible://

The fact that the signature has been created by the signatory through means entirely under his/her control (protected private key through, for example, a password, an electronic card, etc.) ensures, furthermore, the theft of identity by another individual.

Are there any security risks? Since it is based on advanced systems of encrypting, the data transmitted is protected, making it impossible for third parties to access it.
